WTO dispute has been signed, paving the way for a deal to revise NAFTA before the end of the year. The United States and Canada reached an agreement on Friday after US President Donald Trump sent a letter to Prime Minister Justin Trudeau of Canada, demanding the country make concessions in its tariffs and allow US companies to produce a range of steel and aluminum, including from Canada. "The two sides agreed to keep the agreement confidential until it is officially signed. They agreed to maintain the utmost transparency on any decisions related to NAFTA," said a senior administration official. The trade discussions will be completed by the end of the year, the official added. The news comes after Trump personally intervened in a longstanding trade dispute between the two countries by sending the letter. The US president's move "offers a rare, clear sign of his direct involvement in addressing an ongoing trade dispute," said Tom Reynolds, managing director at the law firm Dechert. "We believe that NAFTA is the one trade agreement that Trump has actually followed through on."
