Story highlights Blood found on a knife and a body in a pit was thought to be the dismembered body of Katy Draper, killer's sister Antoinette's DNA was found under her fingernails, but is not enough to link her to murder, authorities say (CNN) A suspect "can't lose hope" and "will fight this all the way," relatives of a mother and daughter accused of killing one another told authorities, according to a new police report obtained by CNN. Police released more than 2,000 pages of documents into the case Tuesday. Antoinette and Katy Draper are accused of killing one another, and the former married the man who is now claiming they are missing. The bodies of their two young sons have also been found. A crime scene investigator described in the report how police found the dismembered body of Katy Draper in a steel-reinforced pit at the bottom of a 40-foot-deep well on the former Draper farm. The well is where, police say, Antoinette first buried her sister with a pickaxe and shovel in October 2008. The report also described how police found the bloodied blade -- a butcher's knife -- and blood in a detached bedroom that Antoinette and her husband occupied until she and Katy fled on the night before February 9, 2009.
