A drug screening machine which can analyze chemicals, genes and proteins in a living body in real time has been under development. The usage of such drug screening machine makes it possible to individually assess the effect of medicines on a patient who is ill. The drug screening machine includes, as essential components, a chemical synthesis unit for synthesizing a compound necessary to analyze, a detecting unit for detecting a biological substance necessary to analyze, a reaction unit for analyzing a biological substance necessary to analyze, and a monitor for monitoring the biological substance necessary to analyze. This drug screening machine also includes a lid mechanism for sealing the reaction unit and a mechanism for opening and closing the lid mechanism. The lid mechanism and the mechanism for opening and closing the lid mechanism are assembled in a case to form a drug screening apparatus. In recent years, as the operation of the living body-based drug screening machine is automated, the amount of the biological substance necessary to analyze increases. In this case, the amount of the substance necessary to analyze increases in the reaction unit. In order to separate the substance necessary to analyze from other substances, it is necessary to improve the precision of separation. The precision of the separation is enhanced by applying an acoustic wave to a liquid and separating the substance necessary to analyze in the liquid. An example of the related art of the present invention is disclosed in Japanese Patent Application Laid-Open Publication No. 2007-251323.
