What's New in the WmiAxon?

WmiAxon is a software application developed by Robert Roersch which can be downloaded for free.An overhaul of the federal government's health care program for low-income seniors is scheduled to start in 2017, meaning that for a large population of Canadian seniors, there will be fewer doctors, possibly smaller support networks and worse access to care. The plan, which the Harper government is pushing through parliament as a last-ditch effort to win support from the Liberal Party for its budget, will see more than 500,000 seniors become ineligible for a program that provides drugs and supplies, including physiotherapy, for 25 per cent of the world's most ill, aging population. It is the first major program change in seniors health care in Canada since 1998, when then-Liberal Prime Minister Jean Chretien's government scrapped its cost-saving experiment with the Canada Health Act. Story continues below advertisement One of the effects of the old plan was to cut the number of geriatricians, which are doctors who specialize in the care of older people. The Liberal government has promised to reverse those cuts, but during question period on Monday, Health Minister Leona Aglukkaq defended the government's decision to cut the number of geriatricians by 24 per cent, from 600 to 500, by 2017. "We're on track to meet our goal of restoring the number of [geriatrician] consultants in Canada," Ms. Aglukkaq said. "We're well on our way." It is true that, as of this summer, there are more than 7,000 geriatricians in Canada, which is more than the number of geriatricians in the United States. But there are far fewer geriatricians than there were 20 years ago. One reason is that the number of elderly Canadians is now on the rise. Between 1976 and 2006, the elderly population grew by 50 per cent, compared with only 20 per cent in the 65-and-over age group. The size of the elderly population is also growing because there are more Canadians living past their mid-60s. In 1970, 19 per cent of Canadians were seniors. By 2006, that number had reached 23 per cent, according to Statistics Canada. In Montreal, a city where a full 25 per cent of seniors are being affected by the program change, it is already happening. "They're going to cut services and services are going to get more and more difficult
