Your stories should be coming out from your mouth, not pausing when you speak. This is where you take over from the game. Character Sheet Notes about the character sheet Your character is the ultimate detective, you have the skill to keep the world from falling apart and solve the most puzzling crime. Don’t forget that “You must know your weapon”, your weapon is your knowledge and your ability to carry out your task. You’ll be able to see three relevant characteristics in the player description: Player’s Role is the role you’ll play in the game. Skills represent the ability of your character. Your character is able to perform a variety of actions and some may be not available. In most games you will have a set number of skills. Gameplay If you’re familiar with hex maps, you should know how to move around in the game. You can move one tile at a time, choosing a direction and confirming the current tile. Your skill will be important to use wisely and you should plan for every eventuality. When you move, before the move you can ask the game what tile you’re going to select from the available tiles. When you click the tile you will know what effect will be applied when you click on the tile. You’ll have to make the right choice, otherwise the game will likely end up with an unplanned action. You will be able to use that tile again during your turn, or keep it for later. Skills Skills are the most important feature of the game. When you assign a skill to a tile, the Q: Does it make sense to use "homework" where I am requesting homework? Suppose that I am writing a letter to my professor telling him about my work. I would like to thank him for the kind words he said about my work, and the recommendation letter he wrote for me. Since this is a request, I am writing to him and not to other people. The problem is that I am not sure whether to use the term homework. I can make sense of it when talking about my own work, but it sounds strange when used for something for which I am requesting something from the professor. Google NGram shows that I am not the only one. A Google Search for "informative work" shows that the term is definitely used by people who write letters and by professors and other people who write letters. So I imagine that "homework" is a commonly used term. Which is the correct term?

A: "H" is a verb that has been used for many centuries: "home-work". Even within the USA, it appears in the widely used US-Census (available in books, US Census Bureau data, and online at and in the recent NPUS History Race and the Census The question, in short, is when was the term "home-work" first coined in the United States and by whom? A surprising answer has been found in the 1893 Boston Cooking-School Cook Book. An article by Jessica Grossman in Science included an illustration of Mrs. Sprague's HOMEWORK, a wool sampler for a young child, with a question in the margin about the meaning of the word "H-O-M-E-W-O-R-K". This dates back to the beginning of the twentieth century. From "Phases of Work" or "Homework"?: Spouse, Family, and Work, 1870-1915 By Jessica L. Grossman The New England
