Both the paid and free versions are highly recommended. To learn more about the Photoshop editing process, see "Editing an image with Photoshop CS5" at the end of this article. What Photoshop is Adobe Photoshop is an image-editing program for visual effects, modeling, retouching, vector graphics, and more. You can do almost anything you can imagine with Photoshop, including drawing on photos, combining multiple photos to form a collage, creating and applying special effects, drawing and altering shapes, adding text, cutting and pasting, and more. When you first open Photoshop, you see the menu bar across the top of the image window. It includes useful features like Image, Edit, Layer, Character, Selection, Image Properties, and Tools. Also notice the name of the file extension for Photoshop files is .PSD (short for Photoshop Document). This name reflects the fact that Photoshop is designed to handle a wide range of image and graphic files with no regard for the file type. In Photoshop, you'll use layers to represent different components of an image or graphic, including components that are opaque and those that are transparent. To use a layer, place it on top of other layers and then use the options in the layer menu to control how the layers interact with each other and the rest of the layers. Photoshop creates standard and custom layers, as described in "Adding and modifying layers" later in this article. Adobe Photoshop also includes file format conversion. You can save or import different types of files into Photoshop. For example, you can save files in TIF, JPG, and GIF formats and then use Photoshop to open, edit, and save these files as separate Photoshop layers. Additionally, Photoshop has extensive color-adjustment options that enable you to adjust color values such as hue, saturation, and brightness. These options let you adjust any pixel, including complex mixes of color in an image. Photoshop includes five-color palettes that you can use to select the colors to apply to a particular pixel or rectangular selection. These palettes are used to colorize an image and to simulate styles such as three-dimensional paintings or photo collages. The choices for each palette are controlled by a color wheel that appears when you click the Colors button on the tool bar. The color wheel shows a variety of choices that you can pick from to create a custom color palette to apply to your image. For example, click on Tuesday, May 08, 2009 and thank you.... So I have been getting a ton of emails and comments on this post and have to tell you I really appreciate it. We have been here for a while now and I have been busy, busy, busy and let me tell you, it's hard to find time to post anything. But not much time to sit and read others blogs either. My little guy is 8 months old, had his big boy check up the other day and we just had our first pediatrician appointment. He weighs 21 lbs, 4 oz and is 29 inches long. He still wears my maternity clothes but I am working on getting a few things, like his car seat, made out of cloth. I have been thinking about so many things lately. I really want to be a better mom. I want to take care of my kids so they won't be so sickly. I want to get my house in order. The things are just stacking up on me and its definitely on my mind and I don't think its ever going to go away. It is never too late, just like always. I just want to be a good mom and everything is just taking so long. I haven't met with my counselor yet. I will probably wait until my insurance ends at the end of the month. I need to get a job, I have been looking but nothing. I'm pretty much unemployable right now. I am sure I will start my therapy next week, but I am just not ready to do that, it scares me. Sometimes I feel like everything is going good until one thing pops up and then I get taken back to those thoughts of me leaving my husband. I just have to be strong and learn to deal with the everyday life that I have to live until I can get back to me and be me again. I would like to tell you that I am not a bitter person and that I don't blame my husband for it. I really don't. It's just hard not to when every other day his old lady is calling me and he's sickly. Yes I may be a little bitter but I would be a lot worse if I didn't. Not to mention he works so hard to make ends meet. But I'll never be happy again, that's how I feel. I won't be happy with my life until this past year goes away and my kids are healthy again. One step at a time.
