As expected, the two spin currents are equal in magnitude, and of opposite sign, for the sign of $m = s = n$ and $m = -s = n$. However, it is important to note that the spin currents on either side of the junction are equal and opposite in sign, suggesting symmetry-breaking. [As has been already mentioned, our model is representative for a general case, where both the spin conserving and the spin non-conserving terms of the Hamiltonian appear and are of equal strength.]]

This is shown in Fig. [spin3]. [The full cancellation of the spin currents for this case was already observed in Ref.]] As a result, all spin currents are aligned in the transverse direction, Fig. spin3.
