This study sought to determine the extent to which parents being involved in the day-today management of their children's afterschool and summer programs led to a reduction in their own workdays. A paired sample study was used to compare the number of hours parents worked prior to and during the operation of several programs for children. The program was conducted either at the same location for both the child's ordinary school day and the afterschool/summer programs or at a different location for the afterschool/summer programs. Workday reductions were present for only one of the six programs. Possible moderator variables included employee-parent status, function of the program, and time of day. The data do not strongly support the hypothesis that parents reduce workdays as a consequence of participation in a child care activity. Category: Classic Cars We're driving the hot rod-inspired E-Type just when the model last came out in 1965. We'll do a comparison of all of the E-Type models. So, Ford's most iconic sports car is now 55 years old and the second generation came out in 1966. I have a love/hate relationship with the E-Type. It was a car that was ahead of its time and is now considered one of the most collectible... It's time
