Windows MediaÂ .Q: Value of a Schema and a Table are same when one is specified I'm trying to implement a schema with a table, and when I use the appropriate command in the SQL tool, both the schema and the table have the same name! I don't understand why this is happening: `select table_name from tables where table_name = 'test_table'` Here's the output:

+-----+ | TABLE_NAME | +-----+ | TEST_TABLE |

+-----+ What's going on here? A: This is due to a little-known feature of Oracle. In any statement which contains a schema name, the schema name is first evaluated. If it evaluates to anything other than null, it is then taken as the reference to use. So, in your case, the statement is implicitly being interpreted as: select test_table from tables (the default schema is assumed to be your database). The table names for that statement is obviously something like test_table. On to your original question. The reason why you should avoid using the table_name and schema_name aliases is probably pretty obvious... it isn't. Use the actual name of the table.

Determination of phenanthrene and anthracene in crude oil by on-line coupling of gas chromatography-gas chromatography-mass spectrometry and ion mobility mass spectrometry. A method for the simultaneous determination of phenanthrene (PHE) and anthracene (ANT) in the concentration range of 0-20 mg L⁻¹ has been developed. Separation and detection were performed on an Agilent DB-WAX column at a column temperature of 140 degrees C. Identification was performed by ion mobility mass spectrometry (IMS) coupled with gas chromatography-mass spectrometry (GC-IMS-MS) and by gas chromatography-MS (GC-MS). The method involves direct infusion of samples into the GC-MS through a sensitive interface. Calibration was accomplished by using the matrix-matched calibration standard, and six polychlorinated biphen
