Million Dungeon is an action RPG game, where it's up to you to take on the role of a Warrior, Wizard or a Valkyrie as you explore the vast dungeon and battle fierce creatures in order to save the princess. Your journey will take place in the underground realm as you dig your way through a series of dungeons and fight off the creatures that want to test your abilities. Along your quest, gather up allies, level up to battle stronger opponents and earn treasure by finding hidden items. - RPG Battle Dungeon- Your adventure will begin with your mother's voice calling you to the outside. It's been a while since you've left her side. That was supposed to be a quick mission, to secure the troops' supply and catch back up with your brother. A faint cry was heard. While you had no intention of fighting, something froze you in your tracks. ... You had been captured by monsters. My goal here is that I will have a single.exe which will simply render a web page which in turn points to a c# console app. The problem is that I keep hitting stack overflows from the console app since the server is a 64 bit machine... Can I make the.exe (a console application), for example, simply execute a web page, when it is run within IIS, and send a request to it and then immediately render it's output? A: The answer is "no". That is because.Net console application does not work with IIS at all (doesn't even have the concept of IIS). What it is made for is "deploying" the application to run it on the machine

_____ This is a recreation using Salvation Rebirth (Revival) of the 2014 prefecture skirt set from DOA6. I didn't even pose any screenshots of this outfit the first time around... It's time to take another look at it. Oh... I forgot to upload the yummy pics again. Update: Oh, btw. I don't think this look needs a tutorial. Even if it does look pretty hard to do. _____
