Q: Flask How to Make a Polyglot Template Render A Single Markdown File Into Multiple Outputs I am using Flask to render a single Markdown file into the following HTML on my frontend: {{ post.title }} {{ post.content|markdown }} The value of post.title and post.content is provided by the remote API. However, in cases where the API returns HTML instead of Markdown, the above render as follows: {{ post.title }} {{ post.content|markdown }} The above does not work because the default Textile format for Markdown is newlines and is not compatible with the HTML. I would like the rendered content to be: {{ post.title }} {{ post.content|markdown }} How can this be achieved? A: You need to set the non_nl option when calling markdown. It will produce a result that is safe for your purposes. Looking Back (648931e174
