I'll come back with a list of things that I've thought about over the course of the month, but I really haven't gone through it yet. For me, the beginning of the end was around 9:30 Sunday morning. I woke up around 9, and enjoyed my morning coffee and cereal. My regular Sunday routine was to wake up about 11:30, shower, read the paper, read my Bible, then make some of lunch, enjoy my lunch with my family, then watch some sports. After that, it was off to the office. This week my routine has been a bit different. By Tuesday, I made the decision to change. I went to my boss and said that I would take over the responsibilities of the department I was leaving. I'm happy that I did this. I think that it is the thing that I needed to do. I also talked to all of the guys that I've worked with in the past. My co-workers are one of my best friends, I've made great friends in this company. There's nothing like having a bunch of friends that you work with. I talked to a number of my supervisors in the past. I like talking to them. They are good people, and are passionate about their job. I also talked to my new supervisor. He's always been a very good boss, and was always in my corner. It's true that sometimes you can be your own worst enemy, but he always said that I'm worth more than that. I think that he's a good boss. In the middle of it all, I had some down time. I realized that I had time to read the Bible, to pray
