Sippel // You've been scrolling through your news feed and your mind has a few thoughts on what you just saw. You think, "What is the world coming to?" or "Oh, wow, what a piece of crap." You look down and the media has caught your attention again. Like most of us, you think of ads as distractions, interruptions and meaningless. Your mind continues to wander, and you look down again, only to find out that you've been exposed to two more ads. What's happening here? Understanding How You Compose Your Moods: Our thoughts and emotions play a huge role in how we respond to the advertising around us. Obviously, there's a deeper answer to what's going on here, but the bottom line is that this conversation is about how we compose our moods and how those moods influence and change our responses to ads. Most of us fall into two different categories; victims and victors. What is the difference between a victim and a victor? When I use this term, I'm talking about how you perceive yourself. Victim If you're a victim, you probably believe ads are distractions and you're always on the verge of getting hooked. Victor If you're a victor, ads are okay to show up in your news feed because you don't think that they're that bad. Advertisers are targeting the right audience, and you're okay with it because there are ads that you like. Which are you? In the infographic below, note the number in the circle next to the word "victor" or "victim" that describes your attitude toward ads. Victor: Victor: Victor: Victor: Victor: Victor:
