Binding and functional characterisation of a transgenic rat MCR4 receptor, an insect gamma-aminobutyric acid receptor. A receptor (GABAR) for gamma-aminobutyric acid (GABA) has been cloned and sequenced from the mealworm (Tenebrio molitor). The GABAR is homologous to the insect D-stereospecific gamma-aminobutyric acid (GABAA) receptor subunit and like this receptor, it has a number of features associated with a neurotransmitter receptor, including amino acid sequence homology to other ion channels. Additionally, the receptor is capable of binding both neurotransmitter ligands and the discriminatively subunit-selective antagonists SR95531, SR95531A and SR95531C. We have now transfected the MCR4 cDNA into HEK293 cells and raised a polyclonal antibody to the receptor in order to examine the GABAR pharmacologically and to attempt to raise monoclonal antibodies to the receptor. Immunofluorescence experiments on transfected HEK293 cells reveal a punctuate membrane localisation of GABAR when co-expressed with MCR4. The binding of [3H]GABA by intact HEK293 cell membranes expressing GABAR was saturable and of high affinity. Furthermore, when radiolabelled GABAR was incubated with the membrane fraction of homogenised mealworm, intact protein was detected by immunoblotting. An antibody raised against the mealworm GABAR was used to immunoprecipitate the GABAR from the mealworm membrane fraction..conv_3x3_relu2 (Conv2D) 0 441 Dropout (D) 0.5
