Yaz was deeply obsessed with what Nana could say next. "What did you think of Nana's friend?" he asked. "She was quiet." Yaz had long found the helpful woman's answers quite amazing, as she was often mistaken for a mind-reader. "Ah yes, I'm sure that's what she seemed." Yaz smiled. "What did you think of the food?" He asked. "It was sweet." She said. "It's definitely a challenge, but I'm sure Nana will put something together for the benefit." "Oh yes, I'm sure it will." "How was your sleep?" "It was great!" She cried. "It was the best sleep I've had for many years." "Have you been having nightmares?" "No!" She cried. "I haven't had any nightmares for many years!" "Oh good." "Oh yes," she sighed. The girl, from Gwangju in South Korea, was visiting a restaurant called Cafe La Boca when she stepped onto the patio and accidentally trod on the animal, a raccoon with a pair of dancing eyes. The raccoon began attacking her after she pushed it with her foot. The animal is reportedly so aggressive, restaurant manager Park Wook-soon told ABC News, that employees had to prop open the restaurant's doors in order to let guests enter and exit. In a video, taken after the rescue, the raccoon can be seen dancing around the restaurant and sniffing around for food. Restaurant workers then use a broom to swat the raccoon away, causing it to run into the street where it was later euthanized. In a statement to ABC News, the Gwangju Metropolitan Office of Public Health said it is "sad that children encounter aggressive animals and become victims of animal attacks every day." "Aggressive animals are an important factor that harms children," the statement said. "We call
