Practice styles in the treatment of multiple myeloma. The study used a questionnaire to evaluate practice styles in the treatment of multiple myeloma. A total of 144 practices participated. A diverse group of physician respondents. The majority of practices were located in large metropolitan areas. Only 27% of the practices were involved in the use of high-dose chemotherapy and autologous bone marrow transplant in the treatment of multiple myeloma. The use of these therapies varied widely. Specific therapies were most frequently used by those who saw only one patient with multiple myeloma. Alternative approaches to therapy were used by both those who saw many patients and those who saw only one patient. Many physicians seemed unaware of the national cancer control standards for the treatment of multiple myeloma. Neurophysiological and neuroimaging study of the right hemisphere in language-impaired children. Children with a history of right hemisphere damage (RHD) are deficient in the production of some aspects of language, such as the production of words or sentences, or the understanding of others' speech. It is not known whether RHD produces specific deficits in the left hemisphere. In this study, 21 children with a history of RHD and 22 normally controls performed two tasks, one lexical, the other verbal, that were similar to those used by Kohn and Alexander (1996) to investigate left hemisphere language. Results showed that children with a history of RHD are deficient in verbal memory, but not in lexical memory, relative to controls. The areas of the brain examined with magnetic resonance imaging (MRI) were similar to those reported by Kohn and Alexander, who used single-photon emission computed tomography to identify the inferior frontal gyrus and anterior inferior temporal gyrus (AITG) as being the cortical regions underlying these deficits. However, the AITG was smaller in RHD than in control children, and the inferior frontal gyrus was smaller in the left hemisphere than in the left hemisphere of the RHD children. In the RHD children with a history of right hemisphere damage, the left hemisphere is not developing in the same way as the right hemisphere. A lack of compensatory change in the left hemisphere of RHD children may be related to the persistence of the deficit, as the right hemisphere is thought to be critical for language. The present investigation
