Misdiagnosis of intracranial lesions and side effects of interferon. Analysis of 26 cases of intracranial tumours and five cases of infectious brain lesions shows that misdiagnosis of intracranial disorders is a common occurrence even in centers of excellence. This is mainly due to failure of radiologists, neuropathologists or general practitioners to consider intracranial tumours, as well as failure of CT scan and lumbar puncture to detect some types of infectious brain lesions. This failure to diagnose (or to consider the possibility of failure to diagnose) may result in complications such as confusion, depression, seizures and general deterioration of patients' condition. There are also serious side effects of the interferon treatment. Despite all this, there are a few reports in the literature concerning interferon treatment in malignant brain tumours. In this article we describe some of the causes of misdiagnosis of intracranial tumours and the side effects of interferon treatment., is it not? (And we'll talk about why in a future post.) Another thing I learned about TV today: it's a medium for telling stories, not a format. I think this will become clear after we dive into the pages of the book. I'm looking forward to that. In the meantime, I'll start my quest to learn about different kinds of storytelling and how to deliver them well. Just this week, I've also set up a new public Twitter account to go along with it. Feel free to check it out, @NelsonMiles. Friday, July 22, 2013 From content markets to content markets... or whatever the hell that means? This got me thinking about the act of content creation. It really seems to be changing. Not just the technology and modes of consumption, but also how we create content, for both old and new media. So what's up with that? My first thought was that this was happening, or had happened, over the last half decade, in part as a reaction to the Great Recession. But now I'm not so sure about that. The idea is not new. We've been discussing the concept of the "new media" for some time. There was even a famous bit of writing about it by Marshall McLuhan in the 1970s. But new models for the electronic delivery of that content have emerged, and they are changing things up in much more significant ways. The

What's New In?

A woman said that after travelling almost 250 km for two hours she had become "very tired and depressed" and she was crying when she was sexually assaulted by an Assam police constable. A video, which has been making rounds on social media, shows the woman with her forehead touching the grills of a police van while constable Ramjit Ranjan, who is black-belt, is recording her in the act. According to reports, Ranjit, a constable with the Assam Police, also records a video in which he is seen sexually harassing the woman while she is being assaulted in Jorhat on Saturday. In the video, the woman identifies herself as Akhilati, a teacher, and says she was sexually harassed by Ranjit in Jorhat. "I am an Assam-based teacher. I am 27 years old, and after travelling two hours on the road, I was tired and depressed. I went to the market in Jorhat to buy something. While I was there, I met a man who offered me to massage his body. I agreed to massage him. After one hour, this man asked for sexual favours. I agreed. He started massaging my body. He took out his phone and started recording my body. I also did not know he was a police constable. But I did not find a way out," said the woman in the video. "I became very tired and depressed. He told me that if I felt uncomfortable he could get down and take me to a hotel. I said I don't need to go. Then he took me to the vehicle in which he was stationed. He sat there and asked me, 'Do you want something to drink?' He took out his weapon and started threatening me. "He started touching me and asked me for sexual favours. I said, 'Leave me. I will kill myself'. He kept telling me, 'I am a police constable, you should not say such things'. He kept telling me to act in a different way so that he would not get punished. Then he started touching me on my chest. I started crying. He threw me on his head, and there I realised that he was a constable. Then he began touching me sexually and recorded the video. After doing this, he took me to Assam Police headquarters, and I was beaten up. After beating me up, he took me to Jorhat and asked me to
