Kerry met in Brussels on Monday with his Israeli opposite number, Israeli ambassador to the US Michael Oren. Israel has been working to prevent the United States from signing the agreement. The Obama administration has made it clear that it is a matter of trust. Israel has said it will not sign the agreement unless it guarantees it will not be implemented on the ground. Israel has also consistently rejected the establishment of an independent Palestinian state, and insists that the Jewish state will continue to hold land captured by it in the 1967 war.Q: Which model must be used to estimate the Hamiltonian of a system with a potential, when we do not know its geometry? I have a system with a potential. This potential has some symmetries. I know all the states of this system, and I can also solve the Schrödinger equation. When I am trying to estimate the Hamiltonian of this system, what are the options I have? Using the eigenvalues of the potential, I can only estimate it through the ground state and the first excited state. Using all the states I know, I can get something else. In general, how can I estimate the energy levels of such a system? A: I think the more important question here is: what are the uncertainties in your hamiltonian? If there is only one configuration you can solve the Schroedinger equation with (in 1D it is solvable by quadratures), you are probably dealing with some sort of a parametrized hamiltonian $H(t)=H(t;\alpha(t),\beta(t),\dots)$. For example, if your system is parametrized by the kinetic energy of the particle $T=\frac{1}{2}mv^2$
