Is there a way to lock various versions of a page to a specific domain?

We have a page that exists on multiple web sites, and the page is intended to be unique to each domain. We can't make it accept parameters for the domain. Example: We can't have the page accept parameters like this: or or If you can think of any other pitfalls, please let me know. Is there a way to lock down the page to be unique for a given domain? Thanks, Ron Edit: We've created a token called company that is in the query string. We've checked this. It's used for filtering of data. In order to keep the page available for all of our websites, we have to store the data in a configuration file. The company token is used to check to see if the data is being pulled from a configuration file. I've added the token to the query string as mentioned above. We can't use a session variable or query string variable as the data that we're storing in the configuration file would get set from another application. We're not sure if session variables or query string variables would prevent a user from changing the company. A: The token in your query string, company, is an identifier of a company. When used in this context, I would be inclined to store this in the session variable. `if (Session["Company"] == null) // retrieve company from the configuration file` You can make this a multi-user situation by storing the company in a non-per-user context, like a DB table or application-level variable. If the application is running in a user environment that is guaranteed to have a

Host-guest chemistry of cucurbit[8]uril and derivatives: structure and binding properties of water-soluble self-assembled metal ions complexes for oil spill response. Plausible and selective intercalation of micelles and liposomes, and the tunable self-assembly of complex capsules were demonstrated. The assembly of cucurbit[8]uril with guest-free ions of inorganic, organic, and biocompatible molecules gives opportunity for improving their applicability. Notably, the interaction of copper(II) cation ( $\text{Cu}^{2+}$ ) with the [MB14]cucurbit[8]uril (MB14) host molecule enables the formation of host-guest assemblies with tunable properties. The  $[\text{Cu}(\text{MB14})]^{2+}$  supramolecular host-guest complex is characterized by a high selectivity and affinity toward the organic dye 4-[(E)-4'-(3-hydroxycarbonyl)phenylacryloyl]-2,3,5,6-tetramethyl-1-pyridinyloxy (BTT) in nonpolar solvents, which is sufficient for the decontamination of polluted sand without any changes of the original structure and micromolecular property of the polymer. The supramolecular assembly of  $[\text{Cu}(\text{MB14})]^{2+}$  is compatible with oil and similar to amphiphilic oil, and oil/water separation and recovery from the oil spill effectively to reduce the energy consumption. The  $[\text{Cu}(\text{MB14})]^{2+}$  supramolecular host-guest complex could be used as a new kind of multifunctional "Sponge" to decontaminate oil wastes. Furthermore, the supramolecular assembly of  $[\text{Cu}(\text{MB14})]^{2+}$  has the advantages of high sensitivity, stability, specificity, selectivity, and reusability, compared with the use of macrocyclic and pillararene hosts.

Q: Mocking a string as a whole in Mockito I'm running into a problem when I try to mock a string variable in Mockito. It seems the only way to successfully mock it is to wrap the value with an object. If i do not do that, the mocking
