"Dragon Quest V International" (the US version of the Japanese "Dragon Quest IV") was released in 1986 as a ROM cartridge for the NES. The game is based on the game "Dragon Quest IV" from the NES "The Legend of Zelda" game series and has many differences between the two. The music, sound effects, and characters are also from "Dragon Quest III". "Dragon Quest V International" was released in 1986 and was a multimillion-dollar hit in Japan. It did not sell as well in the US. In 1992, it was released in the US by Data East as "Dragon Quest V" (produced by Data East and published by Nintendo of America). This is the first part of the English language releases of the Dragon Quest series. It has almost the same style as the first games of the series and it has many differences to the Japanese version. All stages are played as separate rom games and the NES version has the tiles replaced with "cheat tiles". It has a few changes to the story and is the first game to have an end to the game. It was only released in the USA. This was the first game of the "Dragon Quest Trilogy" and was the biggest success of the series in Japan. It was the first game of the series to feature real-time battle stages, although it was mostly similar to the tile graphics of Dragon Quest IV. As this game has no side quests, some of the character changes in Dragon Quest III are not present. 8:15 am - 26 Mar 2016, Tuesday : The Illustrious Amakuni: How to Make the Dragon Quest Series the Sequel You Want, Part 1.
