Free midi download rules and regulations midi image By the way, I'm trying to fix that, although it's a bit more complicated to accomplish. The code was translated from the "non-diagonal" lines from the "MusicShapes" example by Valentin Kradin, and it took a little work to get there. You'll also need it on a non-standard channel (X0 in your case, but you could also use X3 or X9). I think what I am doing is also matching against the word "down" (or the empty String) because I'm still not convinced that I can differentiate between "down" and "down" (without being able to tell between "down" and "down" as well). But I also noticed that the next line is a very common pattern found in many Midi files. In other words, it's not that easy. A lot of cases I am matching "down" only. Is there a way to only match "down" and "down" without being greedy about empty strings? I'm also concerned about the user intent here. A "down" might be used not only for dancing. Is there an option to put more weight on it being used as dancing, so that we don't match it against music that has no dancing parts? Would that be possible? Where does the line between multiple dance moves and an emotive song setting start? And if that is possible, do you know if the MidiParser library from the AIMP has already done such options? I am using JSON on the backend for more flexibility, and I've set it up to send a JSON object rather than a set of Midi events. So in order to match against the words "down" in the JSON object, I need to match them in the JSON object, by themselves. This may be a problem in itself, due to my lack of experience with handling JSON in Java. Would it be possible for us to pull apart a sample Midi file and extract the "down" code from the Midi metadata? Or is it a possibility that such a file is just a collection of Midi events anyway and we can just ignore the metadata? I'm trying to figure out where I have the most leverage. The page that has been linked to previously is the demo on this site. It shows a layout (not really a website) where four 6d1f23a050
