in addition, there is a parameter to allow you to declare which fields are used as the index columns. this can be either the name of the column or the list of comma-separated field names. the latter is required if you want to add a field to the index, for example, when adding a computed or virtual column. the views are defined by specifying the url patterns for which views will be called. every url pattern must begin with a view name, followed by a colon, followed by a regular expression. when called by a request, django will first look for a view function with that name, then for a url pattern that matches the request's url. if no such view function is found, django will look for a url pattern that matches the request's url, then look for a view function with that name. the regular expression determines which url patterns are matched. if more than one is found, the most specific pattern should be used. if no pattern matches, an error will be raised. when a view is called, the arguments are passed to the view function one at a time. a dictionary called request can be used to pass parameters from the url or http form to the view function. the values in the dictionary override the values passed in the url or http form. suse manager administrators with experience in the content management field can benefit from the ability to take their existing skills and expertise and expand them into the content management area. for more information, visit:
