after reviewing the court record and researching the history of charter settlements, it is clear that the plaintiffs and their attorneys established the settlement for several reasons. first, the settlement ensured that a large number of low- and middle-class people would not be legally harmed by discrimination. many black people in new york could not afford to become charter members, thus opening the door for the higher-income white people to control the school system. second, by reaching an agreement, the plaintiffs gained the much-needed notoriety they needed to establish their practice and reputation. it also put them at the center of an issue that impacted the american public. third, by having a large settlement, the plaintiffs would be sure to profit from any amount that was awarded. as the black attorney was quoted by the new york times, his clients were making a "small fortune."

fourth, by settling a case in new york city, where new york state was reluctant to move forward with litigation, the lawyers would ensure a sizeable award, one that would likely be among the largest of any american case. finally, and perhaps most important, by settling a school desegregation case, they would remove a contentious issue from the public eye, where it did not belong.
