PlayerFab (formerly DVDFab Player) Playback: The application is easy to use, and you will have the ability to enjoy whatever you want, regardless of whether you are watching content on your computer or an electronic device. PlayerFab (formerly DVDFab Player) is a comprehensive player that allows you to view video files in high-definition formats, without having to worry about the codecs required. The program is very easy to use and allows you to create custom playlists, thereby making it easier to enjoy your favorite videos. The period of time in which a playable stream exists. For streaming media, this is the approximate duration that a playable session of the file exists. For best effort streaming, this is the amount of time the packet will be buffered by the media player before being made playable. If a client discards a packet from a file before it can be received by the media player, then it will not be considered playable. Initialization The duration of the initialization phase is the amount of time that a device spends in the discovery phase. After successful discovery, all the contents of the file will be parsed and processed to build the stream. This is a significant amount of time that might vary from a few seconds up to several minutes. Buffering When a stream starts to play, it generally starts out with a large amount of buffered data. The amount of buffered data is calculated at the start of the stream and increases when more data is available and the stream starts to play. The buffering stops when the stream completes and the stream remains playable until the initialization phase. Playback Playback indicates the amount of time that a playable session of a file exists. This is not to be confused with the initialization and buffering phases. The playback phase is the amount of time that a stream
