If you know that the Pomodoro technique works for you or you're curious enough to give it a shot, you might be interested in finding a Pomodoro app for your computer. Thomas is one such application that aims to help you power through distractions and get things done in short, intense, 25-minute work sessions. Distraction-free Pomodoro utility for your computer It's an Electron-based utility, so it also comes with companion apps for macOS and Linux, and it can be started in just a couple of seconds without much hassle since it doesn't even require installation. Right off the bat, you're bound to discover that Thomas is a very unassuming application, both regarding looks and its functionality. The app's compact main window houses a few basic controls for the timer and a simplistic menu bar. Non-impressive app that works as expected Even though this is a stripped-down utility, by all accounts, it's worth pointing out that the application also features taskbar integration and support for a few useful keyboard shortcuts. For instance, you can summon the app's main window by using the Ctrl+Alt+T app, start and stop the timer with Ctrl+Enter combo, and press Escape to hide the application's main window altogether. There's also a fairly simplistic log section which allows you to get a glimpse over past sessions. Last but not least, you're also able to enable a Progress bar (taskbar icon progress to be more exact), which allows you to see how much time you have, roughly, before a Pomodoro is completed. Uncomplicated Pomodoro app for unpretentious users Taking everything into account, Thomas is a simple app that gets the job done without fuss. If looks aren't your main priority when it comes to Pomodoro apps, then you might as well give this one a quick try-out and see what's what Thomas Open Source Software: In this tutorial we will install a BeautifulSoup to scrape Facebook profile pictures. Quickly save macros for online games. No programming skills are required. - Save button in the game window for Mac - Easy-to-use main menu - Save with password - Save command history Keymacro is an online keystroke recorder that allows you to record the keyboard strokes you perform while playing a game online. The app also supports a batching option, so you can have it record hundreds of keystrokes in just a matter of seconds. When you're recording, you have the option to choose a number of keys and sets of keys that will be recorded, depending on the game you're playing. If you're just browsing the web, you can record the action from the arrow keys, space bar, Home/End keys, Esc key, Page up/Down keys, or all of the above. The program is only supported on OS X, so it'll be a breeze to get it installed and running. Keymacro description Working with Keymacro can be done through a couple of different approaches. First off, you can fire up the app and head to the Settings screen, where you'll find the basic options that include: - Recording Options - Password - Batch number - Number of macros - Record on keypress - Click on keypress The default recording options are fine. They work as advertised. When you click the Save button in the game, the recording is saved to the app's directory. You can then head to the Settings screen and adjust the options as you see fit. Fortunately, Keymacro also allows you to export the recordings to a single file, which means that you can back them up and import them later for editing. Keymacro works just fine However, there are a few areas that require more attention. First, it's important to keep in mind that Keymacro only works with online games. That means that there won't be any records for local games, nor will it work when you're playing Windows games. Second, Keymacro has trouble with certain games, such as Fortnite and League of Legends, which is no surprise, given the complexity of the games' menus. For whatever reason, neither of the games fully work on the beta version of the app. Keymacro mostly works fine. However, for whatever reason, there are some serious bugs that will prevent the app from functioning properly. When you go to import a recorded file, it will just 2edc1e01e8
