The invention relates to a lawn mower of the type having a two-plane cutting blade which is coupled to a vertical rotary shaft. The two-plane cutting blade is adapted to slice off by means of the cutting edges of the blades of the first and second plane, such that in the region of the cutting edges an adjacently disposed first cutting blade and an adjacently disposed second cutting blade are contacting with each other so that the cutting edges of the first cutting blade and the cutting edges of the second cutting blade bound two angles between each other. Further, the invention relates to a power-driven lawn mower of the type having a motor for supplying the rotary shaft with energy, said rotary shaft driving the cutting blade. A lawn mower of the type described above is known, for example, from WO 03/086188, where the drive motor is generally arranged in the region of the center of gravity of the lawn mower, i.e., the motor is arranged in the vicinity of the rotary shaft. However, the connection between the motor and the rotary shaft is realized via a rigid, heavy bracket. Moreover, the structural space requirements for an arrangement of the drive motor to be accommodated in the lawn mower are relatively large. In lawn mowers in which the rotary shaft extends substantially over the center of gravity of the lawn mower, it is disadvantageous that, as a result of the greatly varying stresses arising during the cutting operation of the lawn mower, the rotary shaft may be deflected when it is introduced into the housing of the lawn mower. When the rotary shaft is not properly introduced into the housing, an undesired movement of
