We've introduced a new workflow for your image editing workflow that maximizes the benefits of cloud computing to keep everyone on the same page. Content in the cloud exists independently, free from file conflict issues arising from the local file system. If you're setup to access multiple computers with Adobe Creative Cloud accounts, every other document you start will default to whatever account it was open last or closed last. You'll also notice if you've got multiple accounts setup in your mind, your menu drop-downs and the order of your options will vary. That last one is no longer true in CC, and the designer/developer type using PS for any length of time might actually prefer this new behavior. Oh, and speaking of menu/options, Adobe killed off the "Effect..." drop-down menus for the 2015 release. What happened? Somewhere along the line, someone accidentally put a default configuration setting in place that forced the "Effect..." drop-down menus to be the same regardless of the user. They've been disabled ever since.

The first thing that can be done when you first launch Photoshop is to create a new document. When you open a new document it will look like this. Each document is unique and you can see that the document that I just created is called "Untitled Document 1" I will now make it into a simple cartoon then I will add a grey box so you can see it easier. This is called a "photo placeholder." It will allow me to make changes to the format of the photo I am editing and place it on a new background. Now let's start with the cartoon. I have a new layer called "canvase" which will allow me to work on all of my elements including my layer and my canvas. Now you can select and drag images from your computer and place them on the canvas all you have to do is resize them so you don't lose the quality while you are working with Photoshop. You can readjust or change any of the decisions you make in Photoshop and you can also save them. In addition to RAM, another vital component is hard drive space. It is very common for Photoshop to use 15 to 20GB of hard drive space after all the pre-processing is complete. Additionally, the operating system may be taking up anywhere from 30-40GB of space. Therefore trying to have a large enough hard drive for a given amount of RAM is critical. You can subdivide the hard drive space in your operating system and then share the space accordingly between the operating system and Photoshop. If you are thinking of buying a new computer, consider buying a computer with a good graphics card. When you add a graphics card, you are able to use the computer with a monitor and mouse that was never possible using a standard card. Generally, a more powerful graphics card will lead to better photo editing and although, you can do everything in Photoshop and only Photoshop and no other software, many people will be able to improve their work with a well built graphics card. Flash and Photoshop are not the only graphics card people are able to use. People can purchase an Nvidia graphics card for a gaming PC or an AMD graphics card for a general purpose PC. Of course more powerful graphics cards are also more expensive than their basic counterparts. e3d0a04c9c
