Unfortunately, Adobe Europe and Adobe UK cannot provide the kind of proficiency that is consistent with your high standard of reviews. So we are obliged to rate the program in accordance with the on-line reviews we can find.

Of course, we will not recommend the program to you. The new software is expanding, as other features still remain in beta testing and have had back-end fixes incorporated. This version continues Lightroom's separation of the design tools from the rest of the program. Elements 5 would be a better name for the entire program. The interface-related features still in beta include the (new) Lens Correction module and a face recognition tool. Face recognition will only work in the current version of Lightroom, as the new release has not been distributed. As many of these feature updates are an improvement to the previous version, I'm downgrading my previous rating to a 4 for now. Also, I'll lower my rating to a 2.5 if more successful beta versions become available. So far, I find the Skin Enhancer module a significant improvement on the previous version. I also continue to be impressed with Layers Panel organizational capabilities, as it is somewhat easier to find and use. And the Lens Correction module continues to be easy to use and effective. Finally, my opinion that the new version is easier to learn hasn't changed. I still claim that Lightroom as a whole offers a streamlined interface. As for the new features, I'm less impressed. The Lens Correction module is more effective, but the new grid view is awkward to use with a mouse. The Live Gaussian Blur feature isn't as effective as promised, and the new bits of functionality handled by the Express section are not all that great.
