A hugely underestimated feature is the powerful approach to context-aware adjustments. With this, you can now set a default adjustment on a layer or individually on any pixels within the layer, and Photoshop intelligently refines the adjustment as you work away. Change your design, adjust the photo, save your work, and Photoshop will now make any further amendments on the fly. It's a one-step process where you can make adjustments throughout the image or simply replace the adjustment you had made. Knowing your workflow and sharing it is becoming more important than ever. Photoshop has its own creative cloud service called The Adobe Cloud that you can use to further collaborate with your entire team. With that, you can share numerous versions of your Photoshop files at once, and simultaneously save to the cloud. Adobe has even worked with licensing companies to ensure that when your team signs up via Creative Cloud, people are paid based on the amount of hours they are taking. One of the most beloved types of photo manipulation is the concept of layer-based editing. Making masks and selections used to be complex, time-consuming processes. Not anymore. Photoshop has given you the power of masks, selections, and the like, and all at the click of a button. With the addition of the Photoshop technology to remove unwanted objects in layers, the ability to make the most of your images is enhanced. As with all of the recent updates to Photoshop, the major focus was on improving the speed of working within Photoshop. The speed improvements can be seen in the settings menus and the backlog. The new workspace also comes with a consistent interface and a variety of streamlined menus. With this update, you can mix more customisations, and use updated components like Adobe XD, Adobe Sensei and Adobe Contour to help you create the best-looking animation, Hollywood-style productions and sweep-style designs.
