Cell-cell contact plays a pivotal role in physiologic hemostasis. To explore this concept further, we have developed an in vitro system which allows us to study the interaction between human platelets and endothelial cells. Using this system, we have described the formation of a pentalaminar platelet aggregate on autologous endothelial cells. We have also observed the formation of a multilayered platelet aggregate, with each layer lying atop an endothelial cell. The use of electron microscopy on ultrathin sections of these aggregates demonstrate that platelets retain their characteristic shape and do not undergo morphologic changes. The presence of platelets within the endothelial cellular junctions is suggestive of platelet transcytosis. No granule release could be detected in either cell type during the aggregate formation.Q: Blurry text when using PNG instead of JPG I'm using Drupal 7 and one of my clients wants a banner for their website made using the banner module. The problem I'm having is that the jpg file is really blurry when I render it using PNG. It appears that the problem isn't the jpg file as it works fine when rendered with JPG. I'm at a loss. A: Try using a transparency table to make the banner blurrier. The transparency will fade out from left to right on the page, making it a little less plain at the end. Use 0% as the highest. EDIT More information about photoshop blending modes and opacity and transparent effects A: You can try it out using Photoshop. First create a new image in Photoshop at 300px width, make sure to add a spot Color and convert the image to Grayscale. Then
